Every year, hundreds of middle and high school students bring their video game projects to the Oregon Game Project Challenge to present them to the OGPC judges and their peers.

The judges are people like you - industry professionals and college students who spend the day talking to students and evaluating their work with a simple scoring rubric.

Each judge is only responsible for evaluating one area: programming, project management, art & sound, game design, or use of theme. Whatever your skillset is, there is a category where you can put it to use providing feedback to the participants.

Please consider spending one Saturday from 9am - 4pm helping us encourage the students of Oregon.
